

'We have about 700 cases in resolution process'

Latha Venkatesh
CNBC-TV18

Insolvency courts are more than capable of handling the potentially large number of cases that may come to them following the Reserve Bank of India's latest circular on non performing assets (NPA). Insolvency and Bankruptcy Board of India (IBBI) Chairman M.S. Sahoo said. In an interview, Sahoo said he expects the government to move quickly on the recommended amendments. RBI had ordered in February that all bad loans over Rs2000 crore must be resolved or taken to the insolvency courts in six months. Sahoo said this would not be tough since the NCLTs have handled 2000 cases in the past one year. He also said that the insolvency panel had recommended tweaks to the law such that parties that were unintentionally excluded from buying distressed companies are allowed to bid. Edited excerpts:

270 days are coming to a close as of end April. What are your first thoughts, would you say that these 12 cases are largely a symbol of the success of the NCLT process?

In fact we have about 700 cases under the resolution process, 12 is a sub-set of them. Of the 700, we have at least 100 which have crossed the first stage, that means either they have gone into successful resolution, or have been approved for liquidation. Not that every case requires 180 days. We have corporates of different sizes with different complications. Somewhere it could be completed much before 180 days and that is why we have also a fast-track mechanism for certain categories. So realizing that there can be complications in some cases, at least in initial days, the law provides an additional 90 days.

INTERVIEW

As you said, for these 12 cases, these 12 are very big cases, it took longer time. 90 days additional have been given and all of them are approaching the deadline. However, at least for one the resolution plan has been approved. The rest, I think except for one or so, the rest have matured and are about to be approved by the Committee of Creditors (CoC) or are under the consideration of NCLT. Timeline is extremely important when you do a process like this because you cannot keep the process on for a long time when the organizational value declines making the resolution difficult.

We have seen two cases where some time was consumed in the NCLT process where honourable NCLT has allowed additional time of 30 days or 50 days. So I am reasonably hopeful. Yes, when we started initially, there were quite a few issues raised before NCLT about the admission process, and all of them got sorted out in course of time and some required also intervention of higher courts. Now we are passing through the next critical stage, approval stage. This will also pass through. Naturally a new law has come in, people will have different perspectives, and it is good that these are getting sorted out and streamlining the process for future.

A large part of the litigation in these 12 marquee cases has come because of this Section 29A and people who are involved in the process tell me that persons acting jointly or in concert, that phrase is the big problem. Do you see that getting changed sometime soon?

There has been some recommendation from the insolvency law committee on this. However, I would not be able to tell what view government would ultimately take. However, surely, they were certain unintended exclusions which I am sure will be addressed. For example, an absolutely clean person, a resolution applicant comes in to rescue a company in distress, and in the process becomes the promoter or manager of that company. The stigma that that company was earlier having, NPA or wilful defaulter, or it had some fraudulent transaction, that should not stick to the new clean person and that clean person should not be debarred from submitting resolution plans in future.

Similarly, there are pure play financial entities which had given loan some time back, in course of time under various schemes those loans were converted to equity, now they have become promoter or controller, but they are not really in the business of running that enterprise, they are in the business of giving credit. So the stigma attached to an enterprise which has an NPA, should not attach to this person. So these kind of improvements definitely I can foresee.

M.S. Sahoo, chairman, Insolvency and Bankruptcy Board of India.

PRITYANKA PARASHAR/MINT

You expect that this advice given by the ILC will be accepted by the government?

I cannot say for the government, but these are the things which are very obvious things. These were not really intended to, for example, there is another kind of disability which debars a person who has committed an offence punishable with two years or more. Such offence could be also a negligent road accident and that may not have anything to do with the running of a business. Then the consideration came up that let us debar those people who have really impaired their ability to run a business, for example by violating the economic and commercial laws, Sebi Act, Companies Act, prevention of money laundering Act, or Foreign Exchange Smuggling Act, RBI Act, and in those cases, we will have enactments, if somebody has violated those acts and has been punished for two years, he should not be allowed. Of course there will be certain serious cases like moral turpitude or murder which gives a punishment of not less than seven years, those people will be debarred. However, after they have served the punishment, six years have passed, they may also be allowed to participate or submit a resolution plan.

You are obviously referring to a case where people are trying to rake up in the case of one of the buyers that he is involved in a litigation in another country on a sexual harassment case, even that does not destroy the person's ability to turn around the company. It is not an economic offence in a strict sense of the term. Do you see the amendment to Section 29A removing these kinds of disabilities?

No, that is the specific recommendation of the ILC, two years or seven years punishment, and thereafter if six years have passed from release from the imprisonment, that should be good enough.

You are speaking a lot about the ILC recommendations which are taking care of some of these problems, any idea from the government when we can hear about a final decision on these recommendations?

I think you should ask this question to an astrologer. I would not be able to give any idea on this.

Is it expected even shortly because we were actually expecting it last Saturday itself, even this week we were expecting it. Is it something that is just a matter of few days?

I can only say that government is very sincerely committed to see through these reforms and you have seen in the past, the kind of measures so quickly they have done. In the Finance Act 2018, they amended the Income Tax Act to exempt the minimum alternate tax (MAT) arising from waiver of loans or write off of loans and to that extent they allowed adjustment of unabsorbed depreciation and carry forward losses. You saw also the change in the Companies Act in January 2018 which earlier prohibited allotment of shares at a discount, but it is allowed now and shares can be allotted at a discount if such allotment is happening in pursuance to a resolution plan under the code. So I can say that government is committed to make things happen, they came out with an ordinance very quickly and it was regularized. In IBBI also as and when we see some difficulty, we try to respond as quickly as possible. However, timeframe is difficult to give.

You spoke about how the insolvency law committee has made some recommendations to tightening the definitions in Section 29A so that more people can apply for resolving the defaulting cases. One of the problems encountered is that most of the NCLT, the tribunals are ordering a forensic audit, now the forensic audit results come only later, but the parties are now blaming the resolution professional (RP) saying that you suppress facts. You know the two or three cases I am referring to, do you think this can be resolved in some fashion?

It is not possible for an RP to complete the entire process within six months. In the sense, he has to come across any kind of aberration, make an application to NCLT and NCLT disposes well within time, even before the approval of the resolution plan so that these problems, any idea from the government when we can hear about a final decision on these recommendations?

I think you should ask this question to an astrologer. I would not be able to give any idea on this.

Is it expected even shortly because we were actually expecting it last Saturday itself, even this week we were expecting it. Is it something that is just a matter of few days?

I can only say that government is very sincerely committed to see through these reforms and you have seen in the past, the kind of measures so quickly they have done. In the Finance Act 2018, they amended the Income Tax Act to exempt the minimum alternate tax (MAT) arising from waiver of loans or write off of loans and to that extent they allowed adjustment of unabsorbed depreciation and carry forward losses. You saw also the change in the Companies Act in January 2018 which earlier prohibited allotment of shares at a discount, but it is allowed now and shares can be allotted at a discount if such allotment is happening in pursuance to a resolution plan under the code. So I can say that government is committed to make things happen, they came out with an ordinance very quickly and it was regularized. In IBBI also as and when we see some difficulty, we try to respond as quickly as possible. However, timeframe is difficult to give.

You spoke about how the insolvency law committee has made some recommendations to tightening the definitions in Section 29A so that more people can apply for resolving the defaulting cases. One of the problems encountered is that most of the NCLT, the tribunals are ordering a forensic audit, now the forensic audit results come only later, but the parties are now blaming the resolution professional (RP) saying that you suppress facts. You know the two or three cases I am referring to, do you think this can be resolved in some fashion?

It is not possible for an RP to complete the entire process within six months. In the sense, he has to come across any kind of aberration, make an application to NCLT and NCLT disposes well within time, even before the approval of the resolution plan so that resolution plan can factor in the outcome of adjudicating authority. So that does not happen and that is not expected, but it is good enough that he brings up if he has come across any preferential or irregular transaction along with resolution plan for consideration of the CoC. He should ideally at least make the application to adjudicating authority before he vacates the position. It is not expected he would complete in any case. The responsibilities are of the erstwhile directors. For example, there is a Section 66 which talks about the fraudulent transactions and that has very specific provision which talks about the twilight zone.

In usual course the board of directors is in a fiduciary position, they are supposed to exercise due diligence and accountable to all stakeholders. After the company gets into resolution process, board of directors are completely suspended, somebody else, a third party professional takes it over.

However, there is a period between these two times, when board is in full power and when board is absolutely out of the power. In between the time is called twilight zone when a director knows or ought to have known, the language used is that ought to have known that there is no reasonable prospects of avoiding the company getting into resolution process.

If that is the situation, then he has an extra duty towards the creditors, he has to reduce the potential loss to the creditors.

If he has not done it, the liability sticks to him whenever the matter is disposed off and the matter goes to NCLT. NCLT takes a view, then somebody may go an appeal to NCLAT, so the process can continue. I think that is also the practice elsewhere and that is why sometimes the insolvency professionals (IPs), in some overseas markets, they charge an extra fee to handle these applications pending before adjudicating authorities after they have demitted the position.

What about the suppression of facts, when the forensic audit comes later on, how will the RP be in a position to tell the bidders that these are the problems, the forensic audit comes later. Forensic audit cannot be done in record time, it takes about five months or so, and then to accuse the RP that you did not disclose does not make sense.

It has come across something irregular, it is the duty to pursue the matter. It is not that all corporate resolutions will require forensic audit. So the person who runs it for six months, he smells what is wrong, where it is wrong, and he should act diligently.

You do not think any different rules need to be written to kind of protect the RP from such accusations?

Not really. I wanted to get to related party. That word also seems to be defined so widely, is there any way that can be restrained like it is under the Companies Act so that more people can apply for buying up companies. Brother-in-law and things like that, if that is included, then more and more people will get excluded from buying defaulting companies?

Related party is defined in the code in relation to a corporate debtor and the committee has suggested in fact defining also keeping in view an individual. What is the thinking as of now is that, these financial entities as I gave you the example, somebody has converted loan to equity and has become an interested party and therefore he is not allowed to sit in the committee of creditors. One can consider that kind of thing to be exempt, that it would not apply to him. Similarly, all pure play financial entities—it could be ARCs, alternate investment funds, or banks, they would not be covered under this related party. However, beyond that, I do not think it is advisable really to exempt really related people from the provisions of 29A.

Not every insolvency resolution case requires 180 days. We have corporates of different sizes with different complications'

Not every insolvency resolution case requires 180 days. We have corporates of different sizes with different complications'

Not every insolvency resolution case requires 180 days. We have corporates of different sizes with different complications'

Not every insolvency resolution case requires 180 days. We have corporates of different sizes with different complications'